

North Seattle Community College Campus Wetlands Walk

Please join us for an impromptu tour of NSCC Wetlands!
This Friday, October 25th at Noon
Walk starts in the Art Gallery

Harvard and Princeton are decked in ivy; Stanford has its towering eucalyptus.

But how many schools can boast of their very own wetland?

Here at North Seattle Community College, the stuffy rules of traditional college landscaping, have been upended, exchanged for a nationally recognized native habitat that provides its own first-rate education.

These wetlands are important ecological lands for the Thornton Creek watershed as they sit at the headwaters of the South Fork of Thornton Creek. NSCC is proud to feature the restored wetlands that exist on our campus.
