

SACsquatch

Hi everybody!

Hi! I'm SACsquatch. You may recognize me as the friendly, huggable mascot for Student Leadership, but like most students who attend North Seattle Community College (NSCC), there's more to my story than you could possibly imagine. Discovered in the wetlands when the college was being built in the late 1960s, I was taken in by the very first group of students who attended NSCC. They called their Student Administrative Council SAC, so they named me SACsquatch. Although I was initially scared because the cold, hard concrete buildings looked like a federal penitentiary, the students assured me that this strange new edifice erected on my land was actually a school built in a very popular style of architecture called New Brutalism. As I've grown up at NSCC and watched the architecture on campus change as much as the student body, one thing has remained consistent—students always need a helping hand — or paw. If you need any assistance at all, come find me. I've been helping NSCC students succeed for over forty years now. I'll answer your questions (I have kind of become a guru of NSCC knowledge), so I can help you navigate the school, and I am always eager to share a hug or help you snap a selfie!

WE EXIST!

Write me
I want to hear from you!

NSCCSACsquatch@gmail.com

STUDENT ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL

STUDENT LEADERSHIP AND MULTICULTURAL PROGRAMS

